Many call on grave marker

By PAT MURPHY
Of The News-Sentinel

Hundreds of people called police today to offer tips on identifying and locating the Edward Pfeiffer whose grave marker turned up in Fort Wayne.

"We've had at least two or three calls from Ohio and lots of others from various parts of Indiana," said a source from the detective bureau of the Fort Wayne Police Department. "But so far, none has panned out."

The marker was found Sunday behind a vacant house in the 800 block of Walnut Street. Police believe vandals stole the marker but discarded it after their prank.

Grave puzzle turned over to history buffs

By PAT MURPHY
Of The News-Sentinel

The case of the 106-year-old grave marker is being taken out of active police files and turned over to local history buffs, says the Fort Wayne detective in charge of the case.

"It seems like we have hundreds of leads," said Sgt. Glenn E. Pettit. "But none of them are concrete enough to lead anywhere. So unless I get a call from a Pfeiffer who knows something definite, I'm going to turn this case over to the historical society."

Pettit has been searching for the grave of Edward Pfeiffer, whose grave marker turned up Sunday behind a vacant house in the 800 block of Walnut Street.

According to the faded inscription, Pfeiffer, the son of J. and E. Pfeiffer, was almost 3 when he died on Dec. 4, 1878.

Police want to put the tombstone back in its rightful place, but Pettit says the detective bureau must concentrate on other matters it's pursuing.

Pettit said he was almost certain he had solved the case early today when a man called with a piece of information.

"A man called me early today and said the tombstone sounded like the one he and two friends stole 16 years ago," Pettit said. "The man is grown now, with a family of his own. But the man said the missing grave marker sounded like the one he and some friends took in 1969, although he had no idea how it got to Fort Wayne."

"I didn't ask for his name," Pettit said. "All I wanted was the grave's location."

The caller's information led the detective to an old cemetery in Huntington County. But there were no Pfeiffers buried there, and he couldn't match the tombstone with a grave.

Many call on grave marker

By PAT MURPHY
Of The News-Sentinel

Hundreds of people called police today to offer tips on identifying and locating the Edward Pfeiffer whose grave marker turned up in Fort Wayne.

"We've had at least two or three calls from Ohio and lots of others from various parts of Indiana," said a source from the detective bureau of the Fort Wayne Police Department. "But so far, none has panned out."

The marker was found Sunday behind a vacant house in the 800 block of Walnut Street. Police believe vandals stole the marker but discarded it after their prank grew tiresome, said Lynn M. Hatfield, police public information officer.

According to the marble marker, Edward Pfeiffer was the son of J. and E. Pfeiffer. He died Dec. 4, 1878, at the age of 2 years, 10 months.

Hatfield said a check of death records in the Allen County Public Library has failed to yield any information, causing police to speculate the marker came from outside the immediate area.

Police are asking families to check their family trees. "We might get some help from them," said Hatfield. The number to call is 427-1201.

Among the hundreds of callers who have contacted police since news of the missing grave marker came out were a free-lance photographer and numerous people named Pfeiffer, said a detective bureau source. "Some have called from Hicksville, Ohio, but most are from this area," the source said.

Richard A. Birkmeier, president of Birkmeier & Sons Monument Co. Inc. said the marker appears to be typical of that time period.

"A marker like that probably cost about $15 then, but would cost about $200 to replace today," said Birkmeier.

ALLEN COUNTY PIONEER DEAD

JOHN C. PFEIFFER, SUCCESSFUL FARMER DIES AT AGE OF 89 YEARS.

JOHN C. PFEIFFER ONE OF THE OLDEST PIONEERS OF ALLEN COUNTY DIED AT 3 O'CLOCK SUNDAY AFTERNOON AT HIS HOME CORNER OF WELLS STREET AND ARCHER AVENUE. DEATH WAS DUE TO INFIRMITIES OF AGE AND FOLLOWED AN ILLNESS OF NINE MONTHS DURATION. HE WAS 89 YEARS OF AGE.

MR. PFEIFFER WAS A NATIVE OF WALTENBERG GERMANY, WHERE HIS BIRTH OCCURED ON JULY 27, 1821, HIS CHILDHOOD WAS SPENT IN THE FATHERLAND UNTIL 1832 WHEN HE WAS ELEVEN YEARS OF AGE. HE EMIGRATED TO AMERICA WITH HIS PARENTS LOCATING IN BUFFALO N.Y. WHERE HE REMAINED DURING THE EIGHT YEARS FOLLOWING. IN 1840 HE CAME TO FORT WAYNE WITH HIS PARENTS BY WAY OF LAKE ERIE AND THE MAUMEE RIVER. THE TRIP FROM MAUMEE OHIO TO FT. WAYNE ON THE RIVER OCCUPIED NINE DAYS TIME THE BOAT BEING PROPELLED BY POLE. SHORTLY AFTER ARRIVING IN FT. W. MR. PFEIFFER WITH HIS FATHER AND BROTHERS PURCHASED A FARM NORTH OF WHAT IS NOW THE CITY LIMITS, NEAR THE OPPRANS HOME, WHERE HE REMAINED UNTIL ^{JAN} 1-18-1849. IN THE SAME YEAR HE WAS MARRIED TO MARGARET BOSSLER, AND

IMMEDIATELY THEREAFTER BOUGHT ANOTHER FARM NORTH OF THE CITY ON WHAT WAS THEN KNOWN AS THE HUNTERTOWN ROAD. HE BUILT A LOG HOUSE AND OTHER BUILDINGS OF THE SAME MATERIAL, AND AFTER RESIDING ON THIS FARM AND BRINGING IT TO A SUCCESSFUL STATE OF CULTIVATION HE SOLD IT AND PURCHASED A FARM ON THE LEO AND AUBURN ROAD. WHICH UNDER HIS INDUSTRY AND ABLE MANAGEMENT SOON BECAME ONE OF THE BEST IMPROVED PLACES IN THE VICINITY OF FT. W.

IT WAS WHILE RESIDING ON THIS FARM THAT THE DEATH OF HIS WIFE OCCURED 1-7-1876, SHE WAS A NATIVE OF GERMANY AND HER DEMISE WAS MOURED BY HUNDREDS OF FRIENDS AND AQUAINTANCES THERE WAS BORN TO THEM SIX CHILDREN.

FIVE ARE NOW LIVING, CHARLES F. PFEIFFER, CARRIE M. WIFE OF DR E. T. STITES, SOPHIA S. EDWARD L, AND ABBIE E. PFEIFFER.

MR. PFEIFFER DEVOTED HIS ATTENTION TO AGRICULTURAL PURSUITS AND STOCK RAISING UNTIL 1890 AT WHICH TIME HE REMOVED TO FT. WAYNE. SINCE THAT TIME HE HAS LIVED A RETIRED LIFE, ENJOYING THE FRUITS OF HIS MANY YEARS OF TOIL AND SUCCESSFUL MANAGEMENT.

HE HAS ALWAYS BEEN A PUBLIC SPIRITED CITIZEN AND IN ADDITION TO HIS PRIVATE INTERESTS WAS FOR A NUMBER YEARS ENGAGED IN BUILDING PLANK ROADS AND OTHER HIGHWAYS THROUGH OUT THE COUNTY. POLITICALLY HE WAS A REPUBLICAN BUT HE HAD NEVER ASPIRED TO OFFICIAL POSITIONS HAVING ALWAYS BEEN CONTENT WITH THE LIFE OF BUSINESS MAN AND SATISFIED WITH THE SIMPLE TITLE OF CITIZEN! FOR A NUMBER OF YEARS HE WAS DIRECTOR IN THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK A POSITION HE RESIGNED SOME TIME AGO ON ACCOUNT OF DEFECTIVE HEARING. HE WAS ALSO A PARTNER FOR SOME YEARS IN THE BLOOMING DALE FLOURING MILLS BUT SINCE RETIRING FROM ACTIVE LIFE HAD SEVERED HIS CONNECTIONS WITH THAT AND OTHER ENTERPRISES! HE WAS ONE OF THE EARLY MEMBERS OF THE TRINITY LUTHERAN CHURCH AND WAS THE OLDEST MEMBER AT THE TIME OF HIS DEATH.

FUNERAL ARRANGEMENTS WILL BE ANNOUNCED LATER.

The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the general principles of the theory of the structure of the atom. It is shown that the structure of the atom is determined by the laws of quantum mechanics, and that the laws of quantum mechanics are determined by the laws of the theory of the structure of the atom. This is a circular argument, but it is the only way to proceed.

Dear Mr. Rondal

Sorry it took so long to answer your letter.

Working on a family tree is something I have wanted to do.

If it is not too much trouble please send the info you have on the Gretty family - if there is a cost involved please let me know.

I had thought Clarence Piegenbrink was born in the late eighteen hundreds - maybe while in Fort Wayne this coming summer I can find out.

There are some Piegenbrinks in the Seattle phone directory. Pete said he thought his father had come from out west.

Again sorry for the delay in returning your forms.

Best to you in your retirement.

Sincerely
Mrs. P.A. Piegenbrink

Banker, reformed gambler built Pixley-Long

By KEVIN LEININGER
Of The News-Sentinel

Today, the Lincoln National Bank tower is rightly regarded as perhaps the most beautiful building in Fort Wayne. But before the 22-story tower went up in 1929, the five-story Pixley-Long Building occupied the lot at East Berry and Court streets.

The Pixley-Long Building was a new, imposing office and commercial building when this picture was taken in 1889. The "Pixley" in its name was George Pixley, a clothier and banker who came to Fort Wayne from Utica, N.Y., in 1876.

The "Long" belonged to Mason Long, who was surely one of the most colorful characters in the history of Fort Wayne.

Long came to Fort Wayne in 1865, but his pre-Summit City life is worth mentioning. Born in 1842, both his parents died by the time he turned 10. He was bound out to a wealthy German farmer as a "white slave" but in 1862 joined the Union Army to fight in the Civil War. During his Army stint, another soldier taught him a $25 card trick which earned him $400 after the next payday. By then, gambling was in his blood.

After coming to Fort Wayne, Long opened a restaurant and a gambling house. Gambling was for a time profitable, but it left him penniless by 1877. Destitution turned Long off of alcohol and on to Christianity. He wrote a book called "Mason Long, the Converted Gambler." He also made several evangelistic tours to promote his new-found faith.

In later years he became a stock broker and built a handsome house at 922 Columbia Ave.

As for his partner Pixley, the storefront of his clothing business, Pixley & Co., is visible on the first floor. Also occupying the first floor of the Pixley-Long Building was the Peoples Store, an early Fort Wayne dry goods outlet.

Shortly after the building was finished, Pixley relinquished management of the clothing store and formed the Tri-State Loan and Trust Co., to help "gratify the wishes of men who desired to become property owners... but whose salaries preclude the possibility of their paying cash for a home."

Just 40 years after its construction, the Pixley-Long Building gave way to progress. Ground was broken for the Lincoln Tower just 30 days before the stock market crashed in 1929.

The Pixley-Long Building once stood where the Lincoln National Bank stands today.

PHILIP PLANK KILLED BY LAKE SHORE TRAIN.
SECTION MEN DISCOVER MANGLED BODY TUESDAY MORNING NEAR TRACKS SOUTH OF ACADEMIE STATION -

THE MANGLED BODY OF PHILIP PLANK AGED ABOUT 65 YEARS
WHO RESIDED ABOUT $\frac{1}{2}$ MILE WEST OF WAILEN WAS FOUND
EARLY YESTERDAY MORNING BY SECTION FOREMAN RICK A PAIR
LYING BESIDE THE LAKE SHORE TRACKS AT A POINT ABOUT A MILE SOUTH OF ACADEMIE STATION. THE DEAD MAN WAS LYING SOME DISTANCE FROM THE RAILS AND ALTHOUGH NONE OF THE TRAINMEN MADE A REPORT OF AN ACCIDENT, IT IS PRESUMED THAT THE SOUTH BOUND PASSENGER TRAIN DUE INTO THIS CITY AT 9:35 AM STRUCK THE MAN AND HURLED HIM TO HIS DEATH.

THE MAN WAS PLACED ABOARD A SWITCH ENGINE AND BROUGHT TO THIS CITY AND REMOVED TO THE WELLMAN
UNDERTAKING ESTABLISHMENT WHERE A CLOSE EXAMINATION
DISCLOSED THE EXTENT OF HIS INJURIES. BOTH LEGS
AND HIS BACK HAD BEEN BROKEN, BUT ALTHOUGH A DEEP GASH HAD BEEN CUT IN THE HEAD THE SKULL
HAD NOT BEEN FRACTURED.

WHEN THE BODY WAS FOUND IT WAS LYING FACE DOWN IN BESIDE THE TRACK AND FOOT PRINTS IN THE SAND BESIDE THE PAIRS INDICATED THAT THE MAN HAD BEEN ^{WALKING} STAGGER.
THE ALONG THE RIGHT OF WAY. THIS BELIEF IS GIVEN
COLOR WHEN IT IS KNOWN THAT FOR YEARS THE DEAD
MAN HAD BEEN ~~AN EXCESSIVE~~ DRINKER. THERE IS NO
CURVE AT THE POINT WHERE HE WAS STRUCK AND THE CORONER THEREFORE BELIEVES HE ^{MAY} ~~HAVE~~ BEEN INTOXICATED AT THE TIME. CORONER KESLER
HOWEVER MADE A CAREFUL INVESTIGATION TO ASSURE HIMSELF THAT THE OLD MAN HAD NOT BEEN
THE VICTIM OF FOUL PLAY. HIS VERDICT WILL PROBABLY BE THAT THE OLD MAN MET DEATH BY ACCIDENT

PLANK WAS MARRIED AND HE AND HIS WIFE MADE
THEIR HOMES WITH AN ONLY SON DAVID, WHO LIVES
ON A FARM NEAR WALLEN. THE DEAD MAN OWNED A FARM AND DREW A PENSION AS A CIVIL WAR

LaBalle had hoped to gather a force of 400 and eventually attack Detroit, but only 103 men, mostly ruffians, joined him at Fort Quiahtonon (modern Lafayette). LaBalle led a successful surprise attack on the Indians and traders at Miami town (as Kekionga was called) on Nov. 3, 1780.

Everywhere there was panic. Many barely had time to escape with their lives. The raiders fell to plundering and rape and retired that night to the western end of the Richlandville, was raised to the portage business and came to be known as the wealthiest Indian in North America by the time he died in 1841.

The importance of the portage began to decline sharply with the coming of the Wabash and Erie Canal in the 1830s. By the time of the Civil War, it was little more than a track through the eastern marshes of the county, and with the great drainage project of the 1880s it virtually disappeared, leaving behind the community to which it gave birth.

MAUMEE - WABASH PORTAGE

Portage Boulevard is a small street running between the southern side of Rockhill Park and Taylor Street on Fort Wayne's west side. Apart from one historical marker in Rockhill Park, it is all that remains physically to remind us of one of the principal reasons there is a community here today.

The portage, a French term for "carrying place," where early travelers carried their canoes from one river to another, connected the St. Mary's River (and thus the St. Joseph and Maumee Rivers, also) to the Little River, then the Wabash River, and finally the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. It is one of the shortest such routes between rivers in the heart of the continent, making the site of Fort Wayne the only place in the most direct passage from Lake Erie to the Gulf of Mexico that a trader bearing his wares two centuries ago would have to leave the water and haul his goods and cargo overland.

Needless to say, this was a great advantage to the traders, but the wealth and prestige of the Miami Indians who lived at the eastern end of the portage were greatly enhanced also by their control of the portage, and it is among the chief reasons that Anthony Wayne chose to build a fort here.

There were, of course, other portages between the great bodies of water that helped to open the center of the continent. The Fox-Wisconsin River portage and the "carrying place" between the Chicago and Illinois Rivers are among the best known. The first used in Indiana (1679), and the shortest overland route anywhere, was the four-mile track at today's South Bend, between the "Big St. Joseph" and the Kankakee Rivers.

Portages led to Great River

All of these portages led to the fabled Great River, or Mississippi, which the very earliest travelers dreamed would take them to China and Japan. But the Fort Wayne portage was the most direct route. Chief Little Turtle well understood its importance and best described it when he called it "The Glorious Gateway to the West," in 1795.

Although this portage was of great importance to the creation of Fort Wayne, it is a route almost impossible to trace today. The best guess is that its eastern end was at the great western bend in the St. Mary's River (near Swinney Park), or, in the wet season, near the present-day intersection of Portage Boulevard and Taylor Street. The western end was in Aboite Township near the crossing of Hamilton Road and U.S. 24, at the headwaters of the Little River and near Aboite Creek. Usually the route was about nine miles long. In times of draught (or when beavers dammed the streams), however, one source notes that a canoe might have to be carried all the way to the area of modern Huntington (40 miles). But in times of great flood, a canoe might be paddled the entire distance from the St. Mary's to the Little River without any carrying whatsoever.

Drainage destroyed track

The actual track of the portage, however, is lost. The great 1880s drainage project that emptied the 18,000-acre swamp in Aboite Township has all but destroyed the frontier appearance of the land. But there probably were several different paths following high ground, depending on the season and whether it was wet or dry.

This was an ancient portage. Used by the native Americans for thousands of years, it was a major highway for Indian tribal movement out of the Wabash valley and areas to the south and into northeastern Indiana and beyond. It was first noted by Europeans in 1698, although it may have been known to exist as early as 1632.

The great French explorer LaSalle may have known of the portage as early as the 1670s, but the intense hostility of the Iroquois nation who regularly raided the area and expelled the friendly tribes, like the Miami, made it impossible to explore. (LaSalle chose the South Bend portage instead, in order to reach the Mississippi.) Because of this, the Maumee-Wabash portage was the last of the great midwestern portages to be exploited.

After the Iroquois were chased out in the 1690s, the Miamis were persuaded to return to the Three Rivers and rebuild their village of Kekionga. They also resumed control of the portage. Friendly to the French, the Miami allowed the "voyageurs" and ragamuffin "coureurs de bois" who traded in furs to travel to the interior, for a price. Even as late as the 1870s, the portage area was commonly called the "Marais de Peage," or Toll Road Swamp.

One of the oldest documents concerning the Fort Wayne area is the trade agreement between the Miamis and the brothers, Pierre and Francois Roye, signed in May 1719. By this agreement, the two Frenchmen were given trading privileges at the Indian village of Lalabiche on the St. Mary's River, near the area of today's Van Buren Street bridge at Guldlin Park.

Site of first fort

In 1721, not far from this site, the first fort, known as Fort Miami, was built. To this place were brought the staples of trade, such as capots (wool-blanket coats), yard goods, steel knives, guns and black powder, and vermillion by the pound. In exchange, the precious hides of fur-bearing animals, especially beaver, were taken out, carried down the Maumee River to Lake Erie and eventually to Quebec or other eastern markets.

It was not always an easy route to travel. Even the beaver could foul it by making the canoe-carrying miles longer than necessary. A British army officer wrote of the portage in 1779 that the waters that year "were so uncommonly low that we should not have been able to pass the portage but that at a distance of four miles from the landing place the beavers had made a dam which held up the water (of Little River); these dams we cut through to give passage to our boats . . . (but) the beaver soon repaired their dam."

General Anthony Wayne in 1796, the year he died.

This historical marker in Rockhill Park is all that remains to remind us of the Maumee-Wabash Portage.

The portage, nevertheless, made the Miamis wealthy, and they came to enjoy power and prestige in the region. Control of the crucial crossroads was the object of British occupation of the Three Rivers area during the French and Indian war that ended in 1763. Control of the portage was also a goal of the western commanders of both the American and the British armies during the Revolutionary War.

The first capture of Vincennes by George Rogers Clark in 1778 caused the British in Detroit to hasten to fortify the Maumee-Wabash portage and store large amounts of supplies (worth $50,000) there in preparation for attacks upon the Americans in the west.

British Lt.-Gov. Henry Hamilton was determined to attack Clark at Vincennes. But the portage of his military equipment at the Maumee was tortuous, taking two weeks to complete. Despite this, Hamilton recaptured Vincennes. But neither his stores at the portage nor his Miami allies at Kekionga were of any use when George Rogers Clark himself recaptured Vincennes — and Hamilton — after a daring and grueling march across southern Illinois swamps in the winter of 1779.

Although Clark did not think it wise to try to seize the Maumee-Wabash portage, a French soldier of fortune named Auguste LaBalme organized a raid on the portage and Miami villages in 1780. LaBalme had hoped to gather a force of 400 and eventually attack Detroit, but only 103 men, mostly ruffians, joined him at Fort Quiaiton (modern Lafayette). LaBalme led a successful surprise attack on the Indians and traders at Miamitown (as Kekionga was called) on Nov. 3, 1780.

Everywhere there was panic. Many barely had time to escape with their lives. The raiders fell to plundering and rape and retired that night to the western end of the portage by Aboite Creek. Infuriated by the raid, the French traders and the Miamis, led for the first time by the young war chief Little Turtle, attacked LaBalme's party and killed nearly all, including LaBalme.

Even though the treaty that ended the American Revolution in 1783 provided that the western territories, including the Maumee-Wabash portage, be given up by the British, these areas still fell under English control. The portage still was both a source of great wealth and a staging area for Indian attacks on the advancing American frontier in the Ohio valley.

In the Indian wars that followed the Revolution in the 1790s, the disastrous campaigns of the American generals Harmar and St. Clair were aimed at the portage area. Anthony Wayne's successful campaign against the Indians also was ultimately aimed at the conquest of Miamitown and control of the portage.

Little Turtle defeated

By the time Chief Little Turtle, defeated at the Battle of Fallen Timbers in 1794, came to the treaty grounds at Greenville, Ohio, the next year, a fort had already been built by the Americans on the high ground overlooking the confluence of the three rivers and the eastern end of the portage (the first Fort Wayne). Little Turtle pleaded for two main concessions from the Americans: Miami possession of the confluence of the three rivers, and joint ownership of the portage itself. "It was always," he told General Wayne. "This carrying place has heretofore proved, in a great degree, the subsistence of your younger brothers (predecessors). Let us both own this place, and enjoy the common advantage it affords."

Wayne denied the chief's pleas, noting that by military right the U.S. must control the ground around its fort "as far as their cannon can command," and that such a profitable place was a public domain and should not be the preserve of one party. Little Turtle finally had to agree to Wayne's terms and signed the treaty.

Although the Miami nation's domination ended, control of many of the profits of the "Swamp Toll Road" remained in the hands of Little Turtle's sister, Tacumwa. For years before the War of 1812, when her son took over her interests, Tacumwa had built a prosperous trade along the portage. Tolls were levied for crossing land she owned, while the sale of provisions and transportation (mules, etc.) insured steady earnings from the users of the portage route. Her son, the civil chief Pechewa, known to the whites as Jean Baptiste de Richardville, was raised to the portage business and came to be known as the wealthiest Indian in North America by the time he died in 1841.

The importance of the portage began to decline sharply with the coming of the Wabash and Erie Canal in the 1830s. By the time of the Civil War, it was little more than a track through the eastern marshes of the county, and with the great drainage project of the 1880s it virtually disappeared, leaving behind the community to which it gave birth.

If you fear making a change or two in your attitude toward life, you'd better not see Purdue Indiana Theater's production of "Auntie Mame."

"Live," enthuses Mame. "Life is a banquet and most poor (s.o.b.'s) are starving to death!"

It's a magnificent message that can be taken to heart whatever your age — and the style in which Suzie Weaver as Mame delivers it is just as magnificent. We guarantee you'll leave the theater feeling light-hearted.

If you affectionately remember Rosalind Russell's flamboyant portrayal of the eccentric Mame in the 1958 film version of Patrick Dennis' novel, you might be tempted to stay home for fear PIT's product is not up to par.

Don't. A college theater production obviously hasn't the financial resources to create the opulent sets meant to match Mame's opulent personality and eccentricities. But the play that opened Friday night for an additional seven performances cleverly compensates for sets, and as solid entertainment, is one of this season's must-see community theater productions.

It also is the first local production of the play, which in stage, film and musical versions has featured actresses such as Greer Garson, Eve Arden, Ann Miller, Janet Blair and Lucille Ball.

Weaver isn't among the nationally well-knowns, but she's a custom-made Mame, nonetheless. Her husky voice, many-splendored facial expressions and gestures and superb acting — whether the moment calls for high drama or sensitive tenderness — are excellent.

ment of the play, which runs two hours and 45 minutes.

Director Larry Life also has perceptively cast other important roles. Mame's nephews were perfectly portrayed by Brett Scappucci, 13, as the young Patrick, ages 10 to 14; and David Yarnelle, as the college-age Patrick's 10 neglected years in a matter of months. The play proceeds to develop their relationship, in the midst of Mame's inclination to live far more adventurously than Patrick's earlier "conservative" upbringing prepared him to handle. As Mame says, "I have to make up for Patrick's 10 neglected years in a matter of months." And, when pushed to marry an adoring suitor, asks "How can I be a wife? I'm too busy being a

Other stand-outs among the highly entertaining 27-member cast were Brian Wagner as Mame's servant, Ito; Marty Macke as young Patrick's Irish nurse Norah Muldoon; Jaynee Vandenberg as Mame's actress friend Vera Charles; Wayne Schaltenbrand as Beauregard Burnside, the wealthy southern Mame eventually marries; Erica Tobolski as the belle Beauregard jilted; Susan Horne as Mother Burnside and Becky Niccum as Miss Gooch, the squeaky-voiced secretary who "learns to live."

The play, which spans the years 1927-46, quickly captures the attention, even before it starts. While the

One of the funniest of the 23 scenes occurs on Beauregard's turf where his mama and family watch Mame riding the horse "Lightning Rod."

There are some clever lines (as well as swearing) in the play and you can count on laughing often; you also may feel some tears sting your eyes, a tribute to the charming and very believable way Weaver, Scappucci and Yarnelle relate to one another.

First post office eased problem of slow mail delivery

By DICK ISENHOUR

Of The News-Sentinel

The next time you gripe about the postal service, just thank your lucky stars you weren't around during the early days of Fort Wayne and Allen County.

The year was the 1820, and the national government was beginning to realize the importance of establishing the town of Fort Wayne and setting up the frontier city's first post office.

Postmaster Gen. Return J. Meigs, of President Monroe's cabinet, appointed Benjamin B. Kercheval, a federal Indian agent assigned to the fort, to be the first local postmaster. Kercheval apparently declined the appointment, and the title was given to local merchant Samuel Hanna, who set up the first post office in his store.

At this time in history, mail arrived once every two weeks from Cincinnati, and the only newspaper received in the area was the Cincinnati Gazette.

Disgruntled residents of the pioneer village of Fort Wayne voiced their displeasure to the federal government and, in 1822, the government set regular mail routes between Fort Wayne and

Chicago, and Fort Wayne and several villages in Ohio.

Col. William Sittenfield was given the job of carrying the mail to Chicago. Historians note he was such a dedicated mail carrier that he actually made one trip entirely on foot.

The Ohio deliveries and pickups were made by Samuel Bird, one of the builders of the original fort.

There was no such thing as home delivery in those days, and citizens had to make weekly treks into the village to pick up their mail. Fortunately, this lasted but 50 years, and regular mail delivery was begun in 1873. On the first day, five mail carriers delivered 410 letters, 418 newspapers and 11 post cards. By the 1880s, when the city's population had grown from about 350 to almost 35,000, mail carriers were delivering nearly 3 million pieces of mail per year. (Nowdays they deliver about 100 times that much.)

The first official post office building in the city was erected in 1886, after heated debate in the U.S. Congress. Much of the credit for the passage of an appropriations bill clearing way for the construction of the building goes to Robert Lowry, who represented this district in the 48th and 49th congresses.

Lowry, active in Democrat politics, schooled in law and debate and an able congressman, was in charge of the bill brought before the House of Representatives in February 1885.

The bill, authorizing construction of a federal building to house the post office in Fort Wayne, was identical to one that had made its way through the Senate — except instead of appropriating $75,000 for the building, it sought $175,000.

Lowry, however, felt $200,000 was a better figure and successfully fought for passage of the bill with the amended figure.

The following year, the building was constructed on the southeast corner of Clinton and Berry streets and served the city until 1932, when further growth made

This was the city's first official post office building.

Erected in 1886, it served the city until 1932, when replaced by a new federal building. This site was purchased in 1937 by James Keenan and converted into a parking lot the following year.

a new, larger building a necessity. In October 1932, a new federal building on a block bounded by Douglas, Harrison and Brackenridge streets was dedicated. The post office occupied the first floor and basement of the building, while other federal offices were given the rest of the building. The building is still used today, although the post office took residence in a new building all its own in May 1980.

Presbyterians helped stabilize early Fort Wayne

The beautiful early American style of the First Presbyterian Church at 300 W. Wayne St. has been the familiar appearance since the 1950s of the home of the oldest organized congregation in Fort Wayne.

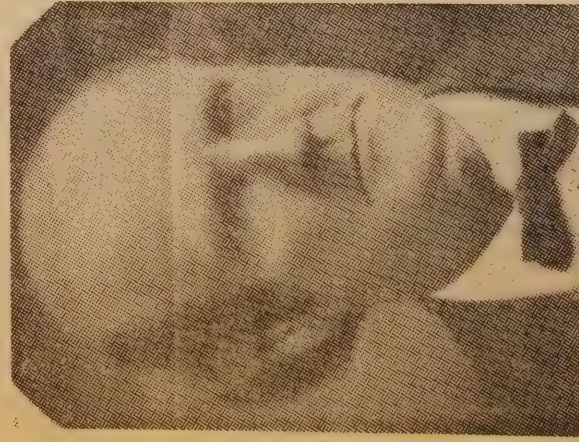

The church today is a complex of five major units. The education building, sanctuary and office were completed by 1956, and the intimate McMillen Chapel was added in 1958. A feature that many Fort Wayne residents know well is the latest addition, McKay Hall (1967); which contains the theater and the art gallery.

These facilities house a ministry that is diverse and active, with programs ranging from religious education, day care and clubs to a prison ministry and refugee settlement. Most unusual has been the development of a ministry of religious arts, encompassing programs in music, drama and the art gallery.

More than 150 years ago, in 1831, when the congregation was first organized, it had no building whatsoever and its ministry's central aim was to provide a regular Sunday worship and a simple school for children.

For the first decade of its existence, between 1820 and 1830, the town of Fort Wayne had no organized religion. The young community was a rude and often violent place. It was the site of the annual government payments to the Indians and the scene of the drunken debauchery that accompanied the payments. One early Presbyterian minister called Fort Wayne "a Babylon as bad as New York."

But the urge for religion was there for some, and in 1820 Samuel Hanna, then a newcomer, was instrumental in getting a Presbyterian minister named John Ross to visit.

Alexander Rankin: 'fire and brimstone' minister

But Ross found the town "extremely unpromising," too godless even for ardent missionaries. To a large extent this was only the Protestant preacher's reaction to the large number of Catholics in the community, and perhaps he was goaded by the locals' insistence on calling him "Father Ross."

Allen Hamilton, another fur trader and friend of Hanna, was the delegate chosen in 1828 to appeal to the Home Missionary Society to send yet another, but permanent minister for the Protestants of Fort Wayne. Hamilton pointed out to the society that while he had no religious preference himself, he believed the Presbyterians "were of a better character" and that others in Fort Wayne also favored Presbyterianism.

The Home Missionary Society did not provide a resident minister, but did send the Rev. Charles Furnam in 1829 to investigate. This man stayed for six months, and it is interesting to note, now that the government Indian agency had closed, Furnam found the community quite hospitable and receptive to religion.

The society was impressed and sent the Rev. James Chute, of Columbus, Ohio, in June 1831 to be a permanent minister. It was Chute who organized the first congregation in Fort Wayne, with a scriptural 12 members. Among those who were charter members of this congregation were the daughters of William Wells (and granddaughters of Chief Little Turtle), Rebecca Hackley and Ann Turner. Among the many others who offered subscriptions to pay the preacher's salary were a variety of non-Catholics: Lutherans such as Henry Rudisill, the undecided William Rockhill, or those who just thought it was a good idea.

Chute died suddenly in 1835 and the first Lutheran pastor in Fort Wayne, Jessie Hoover, carried on for all the Protestants until 1837. In this year, Alexander T. Rankin came as the second Presbyterian minister, and he undertook immediately to build Fort Wayne's first regular church structure. Prior to this, the congregation met anywhere it could, from a shack on Water Street (today Superior) to the rickety second county courthouse. This last site was so notoriously unsafe that when the pot-bellied stove's chimney pipe fell with a crash during a Sunday service the entire congregation either fled the building or hid under the furniture, fearing the steeple was falling in.

The new frame church was built on Berry Street between Lafayette and Barr streets, near today's empty lot next to the Historical Museum. This was a square building measuring 40-by-40 feet with a wide stairway to the front door. On the roof was a simple steeple and bell tower. The interior was sparsely furnished with simple wooden benches and the windows were plain.

In the basement was a school. One of the first teachers was Hoover, the Lutheran pastor. Later, he was aided by Susan Mann (who became Mrs. Hugh McCulloch) and her girlhood friend, Lucy Hubbell. A student remembered these women as "competent teachers who did away with the rawhide and hickory goads that male teachers had in the schools." But Master Alexander Junkin, who followed, was known for "most forcibly impressing his ideas and teachings upon the minds of his scholars, and, not infrequently, upon their bodies."

Presbyterian minister Rankin was a fire and brimstone preacher. Yet Hugh McCulloch, who was inclined toward Unitarianism, liked him very much and thought him "decidedly the best preacher I have heard in the West." McCulloch, however, thought Rankin was not destined ever to be a very popular preacher, "because nature inclined him to be more like a lawyer. There was no tenderness in his discourses, and one cannot help but to get the impression that he would like to be the instrument of divine wrath."

Rankin left in 1843, and the congregation faced its first real crisis in the confrontation of the "old school" Presbyterians and the "new school" or liberal, anti-slavery Presbyterians. As soon as Rankin left, the nationally known preacher from Indianapolis, Henry Ward Beecher, rushed to Fort Wayne to take over the congregation in the name of the "new school." "Old schoolers," however, anticipated Beecher and called a conservative leader, the Rev. William C. Anderson. Anderson came to Fort Wayne a week ahead of Beecher and succeeded in taking over the congregation.

When Beecher arrived, he announced he had "come to divide your church," and he tried for the next several weeks to win the congregation to his persuasion. But when he failed to win a majority, he set upon forming a separate congregation, which became the Second Presbyterian Church (known today as Westminster Presbyterian Church, 2614 E. State Blvd.). His father, Lyman Beecher, and brother, Charles Beecher, came to Fort Wayne in 1844, and, in "an all-Beecher service," installed the young Charles as the first pastor of Second Presbyterian.

In 1844, Samuel Bigger, an ex-governor of Indiana, was asked to choose a new site for the First Presbyterian congregation. By 1845, Bigger and his committee had purchased for $600 the lot at the southeast corner of Berry and Clinton streets. The new Greek Revival style church cost $13,000 and had enough pews for 320 worshippers.

The congregation grew considerably between 1850 and 1880 and the building was enlarged and renovated. The sale of pews to the highest bidder, a fund-raiser organized by Samuel Hanna, largely financed the project.

Just before Christmas, 1882, a faulty flue in the chimney caused a fire that destroyed the church. Custodian William Shoemaker discovered the blaze in the early morning hours and ran several blocks to rouse the fire chief, who, upon investigating, called out the volunteer fire companies, the "Charlie Zollingers" and "Anthony Waynes." Although there was water in the hydrants, sufficient pressure could not be raised; steam pumps were called in, but to no avail.

By the time enough water pressure was raised, the fire had engulfed the church. Onlookers watched in fascination as the steeple became a fiery skeleton and fell to the street, dashing the great church bell to the ground "with a booming crash, sounding a death knell for the fated house of God."

The disaster was felt all over town. Trinity English Lutheran, which had inherited the first Presbyterian church building (and bell), gave the homeless congregation a meeting place for a few months. More moving yet, and indicative of the close community spirit in Fort Wayne a century ago, the congregation of the Temple of Achduth Vesholom, then at Harrison and Wayne streets, offered its building to the Presbyterians for their services. For the next two years, the Jews and the Presbyterians shared a house of worship in an ecumenical spirit not often seen.

The new church was the one familiar to the generations who grew up after the turn of the century and during the Great Depression. This fourth edifice, located on the northeast corner of Clinton Street and Washington Boulevard, was begun in 1883 but not completed until 1886. Constructed of Michigan sandstone in a neo-Gothic style popular in the period, the new church boasted large stained-glass windows made up of 2,000 pieces of glass, frescoed walls, high laminated wood "scissor-beams" over the sanctuary, California redwood woodwork, cherry pews with red velvet cushions, a rich new organ and a 66-gas-burner chandelier with two reflectors. All this cost $81,855, a princely sum for that time.

In the 1940s, under the Rev. George Allison, the congregation began to redefine itself, its mission and its urban ministry. A new pastor, the Rev. John W. Meister, was called in 1950, and under his leadership First Presbyterian was led to another new building, the first part of which was dedicated in 1956. It is the home of the congregation today.

The many social and spiritual programs of the present-day First Presbyterian Church are a continued reflection of the fundamental role this congregation played more than 150 years ago in helping to bring stability and cohesion to Fort Wayne in its infancy.

Michael Hawfield is executive director of the Historical Museum, 302 E. Berry St.

During its infancy in Fort Wayne, the Presbyterian Church survived falling outs.

For a number of years in the 1830s and early 1840s, the Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist churchgoers were shipped together, because of a lack of ministers and facilities. Their worship hall was the First Presbyterian Church, built in 1837.

The small frame structure also was a part-time tenant, the Allen Circuit Court. Because of the unsafe conditions and faulty construction of the actual courthouse, proceedings were held in the church while a new building was erected in court-house square.

Historian B.J. Griswold, in his history of Fort Wayne, recounts an episode that was said to have scared court-goers out of the crowds gathered in court one day.

One day, when court was in session and a large crowd had gathered, a rumor gained currency that the steeple of the church was not securely supported and would come crashing down on all below. At this session, there came a crash and a bang, and the people rushed to the doors and windows to escape the ruin.

One man clasped a Bible under his arms and crawled under a bench. Discovering the steeple was still in place, the crowd came back to find the long stove pipe which stretched from front to back, had fallen."

The second falling out arose between members of the church and church leaders in 1844.

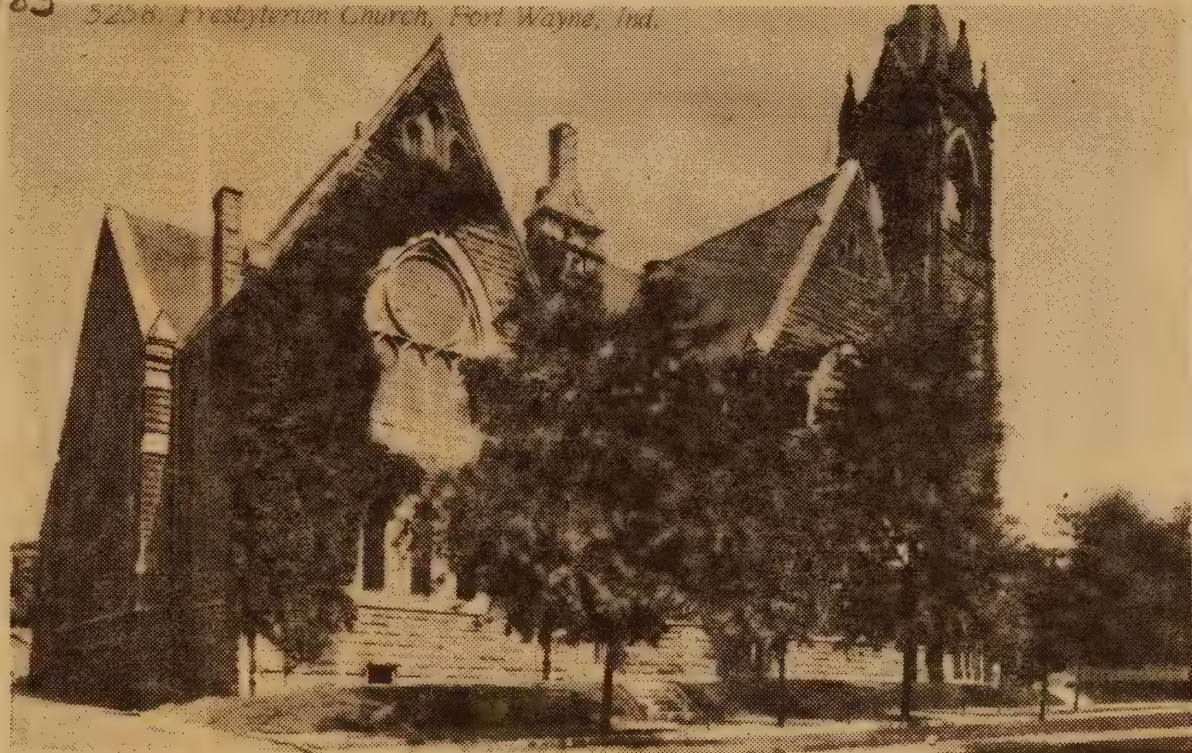

During this year, the pulpit had become vacant and one faction of the church persuaded Henry Ward Beecher, a pre-Civil War abolitionist, to come to Fort Wayne. Church officers had another man in mind and likewise persuaded their choice, Dr. William C. Anderson, an English professor at Hanover, to come a bit more hastily.

Anderson arrived in Fort Wayne April 14, 1844 and quickly took charge of the church. The following Saturday, Beecher arrived on horseback from Indianapolis. When he learned of the situation, he warned Anderson: "I've come to divide your church."

Beecher began a series of sermons in the courthouse, but failed to win over a majority of the church membership. Undaunted, he split and formed Second Presbyterian Church, which was later renamed Westminster Presbyterian Church.

The offspring congregation subsequently built its own place of worship near Berry and Webster streets, where it remained until 1954, when a new building was erected at 2614 E. State Blvd.

This brick structure was the First Presbyterian Church when it was located on the northeast corner of Washington Boulevard and Clinton Street. Built in 1886, it served the church until the 1950s. The corner now is the site of Indiana Bank and the city parking garage.

Later in 1844, First Presbyterian decided to build a new building. A lot on the southwest corner of Clinton and Berry streets was purchased, but traded the following year for the lot on the southeast corner of the same intersection.

The cornerstone of the building was laid October 1851, and the colonial structure was dedicated in November 1852. The church was later enlarged and lasted until December 1882, when it fell victim to fire.

In 1886, a mammoth brick structure was built on the northeast corner of Washington Boulevard and Clinton Street. This building served the church until the 1950s, when the city experienced renewed interest in church building.

This interest saw First Presbyterian move to the corner of Wayne and Webster streets, where a $2.3 million brick structure in colonial architecture was built. The new complex included a chapel, sanctuary, education building, office unit and fellowship hall.

Late in 1957, a new bank building was erected on the site at Washington and Clinton. The property was owned by FPC Realty (First Presbyterian Church), which built the bank building and the parking garage. The building was then leased to Indiana Bank and the garage leased to the city.

Presbyterians ventured into howling wilderness

First of two articles on the Presbyterian Church in Fort Wayne

By DICK ISENHOUR
Of The News-Sentinel

Howling wolves and howling winds were not enough to prevent the beginnings of the Presbyterian Church in Fort Wayne.

The Presbyterians in the 1820s, like most other denominations, were eager to establish a place of worship in the lawless wilderness village of Fort Wayne. The city at this time was considered one of the wildest in the Midwest, and was more than ready for some religion.

Among the first missionaries to visit Fort Wayne during this period was John Ross, a Presbyterian from Ohio, sent here on a three-month mission visit in December, 1822. It was a miracle Ross arrived here at all.

On the first night of travel, Ross and a companion, a trader named Matthew Griggs, traveling in a light, two-horse wagon, found themselves surrounded by howling wolves. Later, intense cold and a raging snowstorm forced the two men to leave the rig and lead the horses through the blizzard.

Discouraging beginning

The half-frozen duo stumbled into the city and roused Sam Hanna from his slumber to appeal for food and shelter.

Although Ross was eager to plant the roots of the Presbyterian Church in the city, he was almost discouraged. Of his arrival, he once wrote: "There was no place that appeared to me as unpromising as Fort Wayne. There was no Sabbath kept but on the part of a few."

Ross, dubbed "Father Ross" by the Catholics, visited the city five times during the next four years, conducting services and preaching in the fort.

The real formation of a regular Presbyterian congregation came after the arrival of James Hanna, Sam's father, who started a Sunday School in his son's storehouse in 1825.

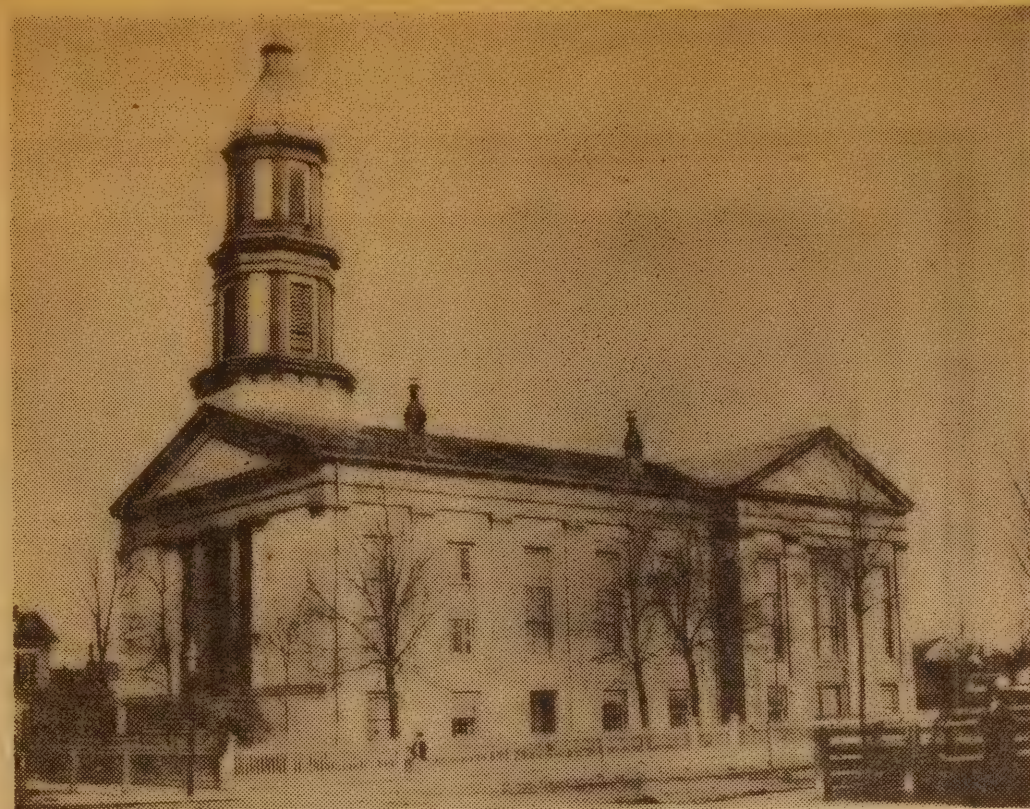

The class was the nucleus of the church, which was officially formed a couple of years later.

Allen Hamilton, postmaster and one of the city's early bankers, dispatched a letter to the Home Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church in Baltimore, asking it to send Fort Wayne a full-time minister. The society sent the Rev. Charles E. Furman in November 1829. He stayed for six months, but never formed a church.

After his departure, the congregation continued its Sunday School until June 1831, when the Rev. James Chute came to the city from Columbus, Ohio. A month later, he formed the first permanent church. Forty-four persons signed the first membership list of the church, enabling Chute to stay on as full-time pastor.

Shelter served as church

The first services of the infant church were conducted in a board shelter near the corner of Columbia and Harrison streets. The church was later moved to a brick schoolhouse where the old county jail would later be built. From there, services moved to the Masonic Hall on the north side of Columbia Street, between Harrison and Calhoun streets, and then to the first county courthouse. In the meantime, Chute died and was succeeded by the Rev. Daniel Jones, who served until 1837.

Later, Jones' place in the pulpit was filled by the Rev. Alexander T. Tankin, under whose leadership the church's first building was erected. Located on the south side of East Berry Street, between Barr and Lafayette, the building was 44 feet square.

This building served the parish until 1845 when a large, brick structure was built on the southeast corner of Clinton and Berry streets. A larger version of this building was erected in 1864, but was destroyed by fire in 1882.

Parishioners were not discouraged by the tragedy, and built a new structure on the northeast corner of Washington Boulevard and Clinton Street. In the meantime, services were conducted in the Allen Circuit Court Building and the old Achduth Vesholom Congregation.
